Recent Election Results

*The 2018 General Election was cancelled

Literature Review

Wong (2014)

Due to modern hyperpartisanship, Republicans don't "cross the aisle" anymore.

Republican representatives generally vote for restrictionist policies.

Size of Latino population correlates with voting pattern regardless of party.

Large Latino population <=> expansionist vote and vice versa.

Casellas and Leal (2013)

Representative party is a strong predictor of voting habits. (corroborates Wong, 2014)

Party voting rates in a representative's home district predicts their voting patterns.

Wong (2017)

A large foreign born population is linked with votes for expansionist policies

Predictions for Clay Higgins

Relevant information:

- Congressman Higgins is a Republican
- ❖ Congressman Higgins won the 2018 primary with a majority of the votes (55.7%), with second place Mildred Methvin (D) garnering only 17.8%
- Only 3.1% of LA-3 population is foreign-born

Prediction: Congressman Higgins will consistently vote for Restrictionist policies, as he is a Republican in a district with almost no Hispanic or foreign-born population.

Prediction: Congressman Higgins will very vocally express a Restrictionist stance, as the small Hispanic/foreign-born populations do not threaten his House seat.

Conclusion: Despite LA-3's seeming Democratic majority, Higgins' electoral security, majority White and native-born electorate, and Republican partisanship would make a Restrictionist stance optimal for re-election.
